Understanding Our Parents

They wake before the sun each day,
Put their tired dreams away.
With silent hopes and folded prayers,
They teach us life through love and care.
When they say "no," it's not unkind,
They only wish to guard our mind.
Their scolding hides a gentle heart,
They guide us right from the very start.

We see their smiles, not sleepless nights,
Their unseen struggles, silent fights.
Yet every step we take ahead,
Is built on paths our parents led.
So let us pause and try to see,
Their love, their pain, their sacrifice for me.
To understand our parents true—
Is learning gratitude and love too.
